Summit unity on defence and world economy

The first full day of the Williamsburg summit yesterday underlined the main aim of the eight Western leaders to resolve their differences amicably.

● Economic policies were the subject of the first meeting after a "prayer for peace" service at the local church. President Reagan then hosted a lunch at which East-West relations were discussed.

Mrs Thatcher, who is due to resume her election campaign in London this morning, had a series of private bilateral meetings and urged Mr Reagan to modify a Bill that would toughen East-West trade sanctions.

From Bailey Morris and Nicholas Ashford, Williamsburg

Their statements made it clear that they wish to show the world, and the Soviet block in particular, that they can resolve their differences harmoniously and at the same time take initiatives that will ensure a sustained recovery.

Fears that the summit could be marred by confrontation between the French and Americans, as occurred at last year's summit in Versailles, were quickly dispelled by President Mitterrand. In a most concili-atory manner the French President explained to President Reagan during a private meeting before the conference that his call for a new Bretton Woods-style conference to revise the world monetary order had been misinterpreted.

Just as the leaders were converging on this neatly restored eighteenth century town, the Soviet Union threatened to begin moving missiles into Eastern Europe if Nato went ahead with the planned

But the Soviet threat, far from sowing dissension at the summit as was clearly intended, appeared to have had the opposite effect.

Both in their bilateral meetings and during dinner on Saturday night, where the conversation centred on defence and arms control issues, the leaders went out of their way to express solidarity on the question of missile deployment and the need to maintain a united front against Soviet blandishdeployment of these weapons". The leaders of Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, coordinate economic policies. Canada, Japan and the European Community arrived here on Saturday afternoon to be greeted by President Reagan with a colourful display of pageantry. Soon after her arrival Mrs Thatcher held private meetings with Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, the Japanese Prime Minister, Herr Helmut Kohl, the German Chancellor and President Reagan. After a "prayer for peace" service in Williamsburg's 268 year-old Brutton parish church, the eight leaders met in private for their first meeting which dealt with General economic matters. Over the past decade there has been considerable debate in London about the general status of the CID and its effectiveness Its position has not been improved by the constant rumble of allegations of corruption, and morale was not helped by Operation Countryman, the provincial inquiry into London police corruption.

Yesterday's report may be the first evidence of a political battle shaping up within Scot-land Yard about the future of the CID. Such a struggle would be reminiscent of the battle developed when Sir Robert Mark took over as Commissioner in the mid-1970s with plans to bring the detective force into line with the rest of the Metropolitan Police.

It was felt that the CID had become a force within a force, creating antipathy with the uniformed branch.

In a paper to the Department of Health and Social Security, which has sought advice on solvent abuse, the society outlines proposals to deal with all kinds of intoxication on the streets, including glue-sniffing.

The society, of 350 chief legal advisers to magistrates in England and Wales, says: "Unlike drink and drugs, there seems to be no feasible way of controlling by statute the supply of solvent".

The only area of possible control, it says, is the conduct of the solvent abuser. As the result of solvent abuse is so similar to that of drink and drug abuse, a common scheme of prevention In a draft Bill the society

Under the Bill, for which the society is seeking sponsorship after the election, adults would held until sober, children until seen by a social worker or claimed by their parents. Longer detention would be possib if a child was intoxicated or the

World Conservation Strategy: 1

Farm that flowers without chemicals

Strategy is a survival plan for nature in a world dominated by the human race. The Prince of Wales will introduce the official British response to it on June 8. Hugh Clayton, Environment Correspondent, explains in the first of three articles how it is practised in the Countryside. Bill Elliott has lived in the same Wiltshire farmhouse for all but three months of his 50 cars. When his landlord died four years ago the new owner was keen for him to stay. Like millions of farmers across the world, Mr Elliott has farmers little time to examine the World Conservation Strategy and its advice about enabling wildlife to survive amid agriculture. His windswept downland estate, now dotted with buttercups, is classified under the strategy as permanent pasture", a type of usage that occupies almost a quarter of the land surface of

The strategy, an appeal to governments, was issued by environment programme. It calls on governments to conserve nature before it is squeezed out of existence by man-made pressures.

The strategy defines permanent pasture as "land used for five years or more for herbaceous forage crops, whether cultivated or wild". Bill Elliott's land fits that definition, with landlord estimates that much of his 600 acres has been used in that way for 1.000 years.

While the neighbours' fields are densely planted with corn down to Mr Elliott's fence, his land is dotted every summer with a rich selection of yellow, red and purple wild flowers. Pink and purple orchids grow in the fields and white ones in the wood. Owls. bares and partridge breed on the farm and butterflies feast on the rich carpet of flowers near the dewpond

Mr Elliott says proudly that much of the land has never treated with chemical agencies three years ago with fertilizers or sprays. The steep the help of the United Nations down at the end of the farm has down at the end of the farm has escaped the revolution of the past 50 years which has changed much of the grazing downland of England to uniform cornfields. Jenkins image under pressure

Mr Roy Jenkins, leader of the Alliance, now has 10 days to get his electoral act together after the strong criticism he encountered yesterday at Mr David Steel's home at Ettrick Bridge, Scotland.

He stood accused, as the Alliance's choice for Prime Minister, of being primarily responsible for an indifferent performance in the opinion polls. An apturn had been detected, but there is a long way to go. There is little doubt that Mr Jenkins is in urgent need of what his Welsh compatriot would call "hwyl" – while loosely translated means loosely translated means comph. There have been flashes of nuted extroversion and enthusiasm, such as in Kent, and even more so when he returned to Glasgow last Friday to the scene of his election triumph 16 months go at Hillhead.

In Kent, the "battle bus" -now ditched in order to speed up the campaign - arrived in one town on a beautiful morning to the strains of the theme from Chariots of Fire and a party worker who declaimed that only the social democrats could bring the sun to Sittingbourne High Street.

The new Lancashire constituency consists of three areas; Prestwich, Whitefield and Radeliffe. That they are culled from two previously held Labour seats should make Derek Boden, the 46-year-old Labour candidate, odds-on favourite. But it doesn't.

At the local elections earlier this month Labour won only one new seat on Bury Metropolitan Borough Council, still leaving the Tories in control with a comfortable majority of six. Labour still fared better than the SDP and Liberals who between them fielded 16 candidates and got nowhere.

It is impossible to analyse any voting pattern in the constituency. Radcliffe is a small but hercely independent town with a shopping centre. paper mills and engineering works. COMMENT

Ower the past few days there has been the instructive tale of two candidates. Both Mr Foot and MrsThatcher have been commending to the electorate a person wa political background that is by no means to their taste. Mr Foot was on the same platform on Saturday evening as Mr Pat Wall, the Labour candidate for Bradford North, who is well known as a supporter of the Militant Tendency Mrs Thatcher at her Tendency Mrs Thatcher at her Friday morning news conference was defending with some gusto Mr Tom Finnegan, the Conservative candidate for Stockton South, who has previously stood for the National Front.

Mr. Foot met his introductor.

Mr Foot met his immediate problem by reminding Me Wall that, if he was elected, he that, if he was elected, he would, like every other Labour MP, be required to "andertake a fresh obligation to uphold the constitution of the Labour Party". This was an ingenious stratagem enabling him both to support Mr Wall in this Election and to give the impression of taking a firm stand on Mr Wall's Militant conversions. Over elected Mr. connexions. Once elected, Mr Wall would have to toe the line

But what does that really mean? It is true that every Labour MP has to sign his acceptance of the standing orders of the parliamentary party. Before that, when he joined the party, he will have signed his acceptance of the Labour Party constitution. So what will be the significance of the standard party constitution. what will be the significance of the fresh obligation that Mr Wall will undertake if he is

Could not decline to speak

It could bardly be one that would require Mr Wall to change his relationship to Militant. If the rules of the parliamentary party would not permit a known active sup-porter of Militant to sit as a Labour MP, it would surely be inappropriate for Mr Foot to recommend the election of a known active supporter of

Would Mr Foot have resolved his problem more effectively by refusing to appear on the same platform as Mr Wall? But he could hardly have done that once Mr Wall had been accepted as an official Labour candidate. He was only one of five candidates on the speak to such a meeting and he would have found it difficult to tipulate that one local candidate should not appear.

cially endorsed, a party leader is in an impossible position.

Basic theme reasonable

That proposition could be held to justify Mrs Thatcher's defence of Mr Finnegan. She had what might be considered the additional excuse of not being fully in command of the facts – though others might regard this as evidence that Conservative Central Office is not quite so much on top of this not quite so much on top of this campaign as it should be.

Mrs Thatcher basic theme was reasonable enough; that a person should not be con-demned for ever on account of views which he once held and has now renounced. But she seemed unable to comprehend, or at least to accept, the seriousness of the auxieties about how far Mr Finnegan has undergone a change of heart as well as a change of a party. The statement he put out last week was forthright enough, but it would be easier to accept this at face value if he had not earlier delibérately concealed his past in the National Front.

It is unlikely that this episode will do much national electoral damage to the Con-servatives. But it is still pleasing when a party leader is sensitive to the convictions of Mr Wilson has undoubtedly been helped in the last three elections by tactical voting by Conservatives and moderate Labour supporters to keep out left wing Labour candidates. FLY THE LEADER.

The most popular jetliner in the U.K. today is the Boeing 737. Seven U.K. airlines will carry 12 million passengers in 1983 alone. Forty million have flown this fleet since the first 737 was introduced. Over this period of time the 737 has compiled the best on-time record of any major fleet. Soon the even larger 737-300, with greater fuel efficiencies, more passenger comfort and even quieter performance characteristics will be available. It's one more way Boeing is working to keep air fares one of the world's best travel values.

Soviet missile threat seen as attempt to influence West Europe

With an eye on the Western summit in Williamsburg, Moscow has issued its clearest warning so far that if new American missiles are deployed in Europe it will respond by stationing rockets of its own in Eastern Europe and will threa-ten the territory of the United States directly. A Government statement in Pravda on Saturday said that because of the "growing threat to the security of the Soviet Union and its allies" Moscow would have to strengthen its defences and develop "new strategic systems".

The Soviet Union wished to warn Nato "with utter clarity," the statement went on, that if the deployment of Cruise and Pershing 2 missiles went ahead, it would take "timely and effective measures" in response.
These included lifting the moratorium on further deployment of SS20s in European Russia, declared by the late President Brezhnev last year, and providing a "counter balance" to American forwardbased systems "in arrangement with other Warsaw Pact coun-

as Nicholas Timmins reports Ferrets who found the flu bug

Fifty years ago this year, in one of those moments of fluke that lie behind many of the best scientific discoveries, someone at the Wellcome Laboratories in central London thought that their ferrets had caught flu.

The ferrers were being used for research into canine distemper. But it was known that a 36-year-old pathologist, Christopher Andrewes, working with a colleague, Wilson Smith, at what later became the National Institute for Medical Research in Mill Hill, was trying to find an experimental animal that would catch flu to try to establish the cause of a disease that has plagued man for generations.

Fifty years on. Sir Christoper Andrewes, who will be 87 next month, recalls the moment with a smile. "It was the middle of a flu epidemic," he says, sitting at his home in Coombe-Bissett near Salisbury, a mile or two from the Common Cold Research Unit he later helped to found. "That is why we were working on it. "We had tried infecting mice, guinea pigs and rabbits, by nearly every route. We had got Wellcome scientists. Wilson-Smith tried the washings in some ferrets. "The day I came back to work." Sir Christopher says, "about 10 days later, he was able to report that the first ferret was looking ill, with a stuffy nose and sneezing.

"The joke is that the clue about the Wellcome ferrets was all wrong. It soon turned out that their illness had nothing to do with influenza, they just had a slightly abnormal form of distemper. The clue was an accident, but we were able to go ahead from ther and pass the flu from one ferret to another. It was a bit of luck, but you wouldn't get anywhere without that."

The "bit of luck" rapidly led to the discovery that human influenza is caused by a virus. Samples from one ferret infected another. Purified samples were passed through cellophane filters with pores of a known size to show it must be a virus that was responsible, an agent so small that 150,000 stretched end to end would be needed to cover one inch.

And just to prove that it was flu the scientists were examining, one ferret sneezed in the face of another researcher, now Sir Charles Stuart-Harris, Emeritus Professor of Medicine at Sheffield University, and he went

It is not without justification that flu has been called "the last great plague", but the disease has probably been around since time immemorial. Both Hippocrates and Livy describe epidemics that sound like influenza. Similar outbreaks are reported throughout the middle ages, including one in Italy in 1504 that is said to have provided the English name, from the Italian for "influence of the stars".

None of these outbreaks can be said with certainty to have been influenza, but the outbreak in 1918-1919, the first 'modern" flu pandemic, left no one in any doubt what the disease can do. Around the world, at least 25 million people and possibly more died. In Alaska, entire Eskimo villages were wiped out. In Samoa, a quarter of the population is said 10 have died. In Europe the epidemic has been credited, somewhat dubiously, with halting the last German offensive of the war. In Britain millions caught the disease and there were 150,000 deaths. Half a million died in the United States more than the number of Americans

The disease disappeared almost as quickly as it had arisen. The search for the causitive agent began in earnest, prompted partly by the fact that it appeared to affect pigs, leading to the pandemic being dubbed "swine flu".

Today much more is known abouts flu and the unique blend of characteristics which make it perhaps the most successful virus of all. Flu is unlike most other viruses in that it infects both man and animals and, it is constantly changing.

number of animals, notably birds, suffer from flu. These animal viruses, of which more than 20 are known, have surface proteins markedly different from the strains found in man. The current theory is that either a man or an animal, most probably a bird, becomes infected with both a human and an animal virus at the same time. As the viruses reproduce, the eight pieces of RNA from each virus can become scrambled, one piece or more being swapped between the two. The result is a new virus, able to reproduce in man with surface proteins from the animal virus. Man's defensive system will simply not recognize the new virus strain, and the potential for a pandemic is born. Laboratory studies suggest that this process can happen easily, yet pandemics are rare. This may be because many of the changes that take place are the RNA, tiny mistakes occur about lethal to the virus - they offer no once in every million. If the mistake advantage over the exising versions. When a successful change does occur, either of the two surface proteins, the it still has to get out, to find a human 'new" virus may have an advantage to infect. Whatever the reason, such over the perfect copies. As the profound changes have produced antibodies gather to overwhelm the pandemics only three times this century.

new version, which survives to escape. In 1932, the year before the virus was discovered and the explosion in flu research began, Encyclopaedia Brittannica was advising bluntly: "There is no routine treatment for influenza except bed." Today, adding an aspirin or two, that is still essentially true, Vaccines can help to prevent flu, although they strains which limits their effectiveness and antibiojtics can treat complications. But for flu itself, as for almost all other viral infections, treatment remains elusive.

Neither of the major shifts in to virus in 1957 and 1968 produced pandemics to compare with that of 1918-1919, although their effects were bad enough. What made the 1918-1919 outbreak so special is still a mystery. There has been speculation that after four years of war people were run down, that nutrition was poor, or that crowding in troopships and in trenches helped the explosive spread of the

"All these factors may have contributed," says Dr John Skehel, co-director of the World Health Organization's World Influenza Centre in London, and Sir Christopher Andrewes successor at the National Institute for Medical Research. "But it is equally possible that just about all of the impact was down to the properties of the virus. We do not really know what those were. As we do not know what made the virus so special, we have to say it is possible that it could happen

Although it is 50 years since the discovery of the virus. Dr Skehel-points out that it is only in the past 20 years thay detailed biochemical work on the virus structure has been possible. "That is really not long in time we may get a much clearer idea about precisely what changes in the virus increase its impact on man, and from that we may develop drug treatments and better vaccines."

Flu research has pointed to better techniques for studying many types of virus and led directly to the discovery of interferon - at the Mill Hill laboratories - which may yet have a role to play in cancer treatment. But the fact that flu keeps changing and has an animal reservoir makes it unlikely that the disease will ever be eradicated.

"If we ever do get rid of it," Sir Christopher Andrewes says, "it will probably be of its own accord. There was a period last century, between about 1850 and 1880, when there was practically no flu about. It could always happen again. We might say, How clever we are, look what our vaccine has done'. But it will pop up again when you are not expecting it.

Unhappy end for a film star?

Hollywood - As old stars go she is showing her age badly, in fact, one night fairly say she's a bit of an old wreck.

She starred in countless movies: The Sting with Robert Redford and Paul Newman, Inside Daisy Clover with Natalic Wood and Steve McQueen and, more recently. Six Weeks with Dudley Moore recently. Six Weeks with Dudley Moore and Mary Tyler Moore.

She has been in such TV series as Charlie's Angels. The Rockford Files, Three's Company. The Fall Guy and The Dukes of Hazard. She's has never had star billing, but without her all the above would have been missing tons of atmosphere and a genuine period feel.

She's instantly recognizable, although you will not find her in the Who's Who of Movies. She is a California landmark: she is the Santa Monica Pier.

Today, however, the vintage movie star is very trayed around the edges as a result of recent storms that devastated the California coastline. They ripped up her pilings, shattered and scattered her timbers the length and breadth of the white beaches that fringe the state. She is heavily truncated - once 1.700 feet long, she is now 400 feet shorter because of the savage ocean, and those 20-foot waves washed

Today her film career.

Today her fate is being pondered. For the next few months at least no movie crews will tread her creaky boards or shoot her in soft lights, no stellar personalities. will sit astrice her carousel horses.

Like any ancient film star this one has had a chequered past – and known several incarnations. The pier is actually two piers. The amusement portion called Newcomb pier was built in 1916, with the addition five years later of a fiching nime. five years later of a fishing pier.

In the 1920s and 30s the pier was popular with courting couples, who waltzed and quickstepped to the beat of famous bandleaders in the staborate La Monica Ballroom, which had been built in 1924 for $150,000. On big band nights some 3,000 couples danced the night away and then took a breather by sayouring the crisp ocean spray. When deading wand the ballroom became a skaping rink and was believen used as a makeshift city hall while the nearby Santa Monica givic headquarters was being built.

It was after the Second World War that Hollywood suddenly discovered the landmark and turned it into a star. Mark "Speed" Peterson, a former lifeguard who is now herbertmaster and has rown un with the pier, says there were times when the studios were fining up to rent the pier to star in their movies:

"In 1960 they made Elmer Gantry (with Burt Lancaster and Jean Simmons) and used the balkroom as a preacher's tent." recalls Peterson. "And they filmed the fire sequences there. It was a pretty crazy time but the finished movie looked great. You'd never have known it was shot on the Pacific ocean and not in some revival tent

For The Sting, the director George Roy Hill commandeered the famous carousel, which became the front for Eileen Brennan's house of ill repute. For Inside Daisy Clover, the studio built a small house in the middle of the pier then tore it down when the film was finished.

Whenever a scene called for a trip to a funfair, a day at the sea, a precarious helicopter landing, a dramatic drug drop, an offbeat chase, a simple fishing scene or just a loving stroll on the sand, the pier was called into service.

These days the pier rents for about $400 a day - not a significant sum by standards of suffation-riddled Hollywood. But it badly needs a facelist costing $5,m, which will have to be found by its owner, the city of Santa Monicz.

In 1972 the pier was condemned as an eyesore and the city decided to tear it down, planning in its place a 35-acre island. with a high-rise hotel and convention centre, reached by a four-lane causeway, but the idea touched off a revolution in the city. The pier was reprieved and the architects of her destruction, three council-

PROFILE: David Bowie

Ziggy's rock and role reversal

Sexual indiscretions are not supposed to make public careers, but the David Bowie the world now knows was launched 11 years ago with a confession. Admitting his bisexuality to an interviewer (this one, in fact) who was thereafter never quite sure whether he had dug out a genuine scoop or had been carefully manipulated, Bowie became an object of such fascination that an inasupicious career was spectacularly transformed. Quite how much is apparent this week, when he arrives for the British leg of a world tour encompassing 95 concerts, trailing his credentials as a pop icon, theatre, television and film actor, and, most vitally, the arbiter of a generation's style.

He began plainly enough as David Jones, his real name, following fashions, not setting them. His return to the public stage after a five-year absence filming, recording, rebuilding his once precarious health and reorganizing his business affairs has impressively reasserted his popularity. He is said to be recieving $1m for a single appearance today at a rock festival in San Bernardino, California. His promoters claim that 500,000 people have applied for tickets to his British performances, which include three openair shows (July 1-3) at the 50,000-capacity Milton Keynes Bowl. A new recording contract with EMI is worth at last $12m, $1.7m of which he received for his first album under the deal. To EMI's relief, that record went to the top of the charts immediately after its release a few weeks

To fulfill his new obligations, Bowie has shown an unexpected willingness to be interviewed and, even more unusually, to confront his highly speculative personal history. To borrow a phrase of his former hero, Bob Dylan, this year he is bringing it? all back home.

Recently he revisited his Brixton birthplace to be photouraphed by David Bailey; his three concerts at Wembley Arena later this week, followed by two at the National Exhibition Centre next week, represent another sort of homecoming in a remarkable, image-mongering career which has provoked suspicion as . well as admiration.

Although he will continue to and made famous, such as the transient, hybrid nature. androgynous Ziggy Stardust and the troubadour of Space Oddity". Bowie says that at 36 such impostures are firmly behind him. He has turned his back on the trend of electronic pop which he started and which is now in full spate among the latest

Let's Dance. his latest. album, has caused consternation among the avant-garde by reemploying guitars and drawing sustenance from the simple, exuberant rhythm-and-blues he copied in adolescence. He calls it "emotionally uplifting" music, a prescription for the times, and the fruit of a newfound personal Inevitably, sceptics have al-ready declared that he is merely shuffling his pack of aliases - and such doubts may be forgivable, since warmth and wholesomeness have hardly featured in a career marked by brilliant calculation. His admission of bisexuality, apparently truthful and spontaneous, was a novel but risky tactic which set a precedent for the "coming out" of Elton John and other rock stars.

For almost a decade he had been struggling to establish himself: his well-timed pronouncement focused publicity on an unconventional personality and gave impetus to the launch of the album on which his career pivoted: The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars, a feverish, uneven projection of rock stardom in a world awaiting apocalypse. What the world actually awaited was a pop phenomenon for the 1970s, to replace the Beatles and Rolling Stones. Looking abnormally glamorous in skin-tight cat-suit and spaceage platform boots, his hair a bright-red stook, Bowie initiated the new rock cult based on glitter and glamour, once neatly defined by John Lennon as "rock 'n' roll with lipstick on" and quickly debased by Bowie's many imitators.

Ziggy Stardust Bowie his own stardom, then trapped him in its doomed persona, from which he escaped into seclusion by the first of several strategic "retirements". It taught him that he could manufacture compelling images, and the musical styles to complement them, at will; the discovery has been the source both of his unwavering appeal, and of the common, sometimes warranted criticism that he is an opportunist whose emotions are not always fully engaged. Such imputations, often made by earnest adherents of earlier pop values, undervalue his unexput on the costumes of the ampled sense of rock theatre and various identities he has created his understanding of the music's ished into mental institutions. He was not close to his mother. His father, who bought him a saxophone and supported his musical ambitions, died at the moment of his first hit, with 'Space Oddity" in 1969; he had at various times run a theatre troupe and owned a Soho wrestling club.

Bowie's own gift for publicity surfaced as a schoolboy in Bromley, south London, when he appeared on the BBC Tonight programme protesting the cause of long hair. Next he wrote to the washing-machine magnate John Bloom, asking for money to outfit his rhythm-andblues group. Bloom supplied a showbusiness contact through whom Bowie recorded his first single in 1964: "Liza Jane", credited to Davie Jones and the King Bees.

The 1960s were his undistinguished apprenticeship in pop music. He moved uncertainly between imitating Anthony Newley. (recording in 1967 a children's novelty song. "The Laughing Gnome") and dabbling as a hippie in mime, Buddhism and the arts-lab scene. The mime artist Lindsay Kemp opened up to him a new world, awakening theatrical instincts which were channelled, unsuccessfully, into show-business by a managercum-mentor, Ken Pitt. who earned Bowie's admiration by virtue of his friendship with the late film star James Dean, A peculiar consequence was that he sang the first English language-version of "Comme d'habitude", which Paul Anka re-wrote as "My Way". More productive was a Bob Dylan phase, from which came "Space Oddity", his best-known song, which he has re-recorded and released several

They were complementary. DeFries, the deal-maker, gave Bowie the confidence to exploit his ideas. But he also admired the style of the American manager Allen Klein. whose high-handed methods briefly attracted such clients as the Rolling Stones and the Beatles.

Associating with Lou Reed, the Velvet Underground's influential chronicler of dark, New York street-life, certainly sharpened his own image of Clockwork Orange androgyny. But his musical collaborations, ap-proached in a spirit of real inquiry, have generally been mutually beneficial; "Fame", for example a hit with John Lennon in 1975.

It has been a small step from the impersonations of his records to acting itself, and each new role has reflected some aspect of his various personae. In The Man Who Fell To Earth, his 1976 debut as a film star, Nicolas Roeg (who had seen his Omnibus TV documentary, "Cracked Actor") cast him unerringly as a displaced alien. Just A Gigolo, a David Hemmings flop set amidst Weimar degeneracy. traded his fragile maleness against the camp legend of Marlene Dietrich. And in Baal, a BBC production in 1982, he was Brecht's coldly amoral anti-hero. Playing The Elephant Man, a lauded Broadway appearance in 1980, inverted his handsome image, a trick he accomplished by mime; and in The Hunger he became a senescent vampire. Not the least merit of Merry Christmas, Mr Lawrence, Nagisa Oshima's PoW drama, is that he finally learned to act rather than perform. Now he hopes to direct, and is starting with promotional video films at EMI's expense.

He has generally got what he wanted. In January 1975 he wrested control of his career from DeFries, though the settlement was punitive. As his own, conspicuously successful business manager, he keeps few employees and relies upon a formidably protective assistant, "Coco" Schwab, the only survivor of the DeFries regime. His private travels, which satisfy an interest in ethnic musics, include no superstar entourage.

He lives unostentatiously in a New York apartment and a house near Lausanne with his 12-year-son, Duncan, known in more publicity-conscious days as 'Zowie". When familiarity with our poli-ticians turns to contempt, there is a simple cure: turn them inside out and upside down. Michael Curl has and upside down. Michael Curl has done this most adroitly in his dictionary of anagrams, published in paperback this week. The PM, as Saatchi knows, can be metamorphosed into "That great charmer," but by way of balance. Curl offers "Meg. the arch-tartar," Poor Ted Heath becomes "Had teeth" or "The death" while, further back, William Ewart, Gladstone turns into "Wild. Ewart Gladstone turns into "Wild agitator means well." and Disraeli into "I lead, sir." Unamused as ever. Mary Whitehouse finds herself saying: "I may rue the show." I cannot match all this, but that does cannot match all this, but that does not stop me trying. I have deed-polled the Labour leader into "Oh facile Tom," and David Steel into "Vital deeds" or "Laddie's vet", whichever he finds the more voteworthy. Election night will bring the resurrection of the flop of the century - the show that closed before it opened, losing £11am of backers' money. Now it is Y, and it has cost a further £500.000. It still stars the Italian mime Arturo Brachetti, but White's name is no longer on it. My political challenger today is, I am afraid, rather frivolous, belonging as he does to the Fancy Dress Party. A. H. Crockford, who is contesting Dartford, has produced a lengthy and excruciating manifesto. Reduce the size of unemployment figures, he suggests, by using smaller print, and the length of patients' waiting lists by increasing prescrip-tion charges to 5,000 volts. He promises to act swiftly to stop the falling pound: "If one lands anywhere near us we will pick it up immediately." The Fancy Dress Party has "always been against the especially off licences," and will increase the size of exports: "In future it will be sold in two pint cans." £150, for this?

2. 1953: months of painstaking effort come to a climax as the Oueen walks in procession to her coronation

Vivat! Vivat! The day that grime gave way to glory

Some impressions never fail. My recollections of the events in which I was involved 30 years ago still seem

I recall standing in Westminster Abbey on the evening before the coronation. The months of preparation were over, and the grey Sanctuary had been transformed into a place of golden light. The raised platform of the "Theatre" was covered in a golden coloured carpet, surrounded by frontals of woven cloth of gold and with the magnificent Abbey plate gleaming on the high altar and displayed on a table below the royal box. Facing the altar was the ancient coronation chair with the stone of destiny below the seat and beyond was the raised dais of the throne with its deep searlet

Once again, as for nearly 900 years, the Abbey had been prepared of kines and queens who had been consecrated and crowned within its walls. That evening the Abbey seemed to be wrapped in a hush of expectation.

As a Gold Staff Commander ! would have to spend many hours in that sancturary the next day. I turned and walked through the choir screen to where the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, would receive the Abbey keys from the Dean, Dr Alan Don. For the next 24 hours, the Abbey would in the custody of the Earl Marshal. A few moments later a small black van with a single police car entered Dean's Yard.

It carried the most precious and fabulous gems in the world - the Crown Jewels with the crowns, swords and sceptres which tomor-row would move in scintillating splendour through the complicated rituals of the ceremony. The Dean. the chapter and choristers had formed a procession through the cloisters to escort the royal regalia to the old Jerusalem chamber where they were laid out on a long table under the watchful eyes of the yeoman warders from the Tower of London. For centuries the regalia had been brought back to the Abbey on the eve of the coronation.

There had been mistakes and confusions in the ordering of past coronations. That of George III had been a disaster. Queen Victoria had not been amused by the manner in which her service had been conducted. She wrote in her diary that "the Archbishop was confused and puzzled, the Bishop of Durham could tell me nothing" and the Coronation ring had been forced on the wrong finger, causing her intense pain. Less serious blunders had occurred even at the coronation of

George VI.
We had been summoned to a meeting with the Earl Marshal in the Abbey in December before the work began. He had taken every detail of the preparations into his grasp. For example, he was concerned that all new timber should have been carefully seasoned. "The Queen ascending the throne to the sound of groaning timber might be regarded as bad an omen for her reign as the jewel which fell from the crown of George III at his coronation, and which was later regarded as presaging the loss of the American lonics," he remarked.

He set aside the whole of May for rehearsals. It was as well he did. It was difficult for elderly peers to follow a complicated pattern of movements. wearing unfamiliar coronets and with long robes sweeping their heels and in a few cases holding a heavy sword upright hencath their chins. Difficulties increased when the assistant bishops joined the rehearsals. Each bishop had his own idea of a liturgical pace. After several fumbling starts the Earl Marshal's voice came loud and clear: "If the bishops do not learn to walk in step we'll be here all night."

They got the message.
One who went off for a short holiday before a rehearsal felt the duke's firm hand. The Earl Marshal sent a police car to bring him back.

He came into the Abbey, pink with indignation, his chaplain carrying his hand luggage. "Most humiliat-ing", he protested. "Escorted from my hotel by police. What on earth will people think?" His protest faltered when he saw the gaitered figure of the Archbishop.

There were problems with a few peers whose attendance at rehearsals was also obligatory. "If you are not at the rehearsals, you will not be there at all", the Earl Marshal told one peer protesting that he knew it all. There was not the slightest doubt he meant what he said. The rehearsals were very complex. precariously balanced, entirely de-pendent on the practised timing of the several hundred people taking part. That everything went with great precision was due to the superb organization of the Earl Marshal and officers of the College of Arms.

There was however, a slight fault On her arrival at the Abbey, the Queen would retire briefly to a room in the Annexe while the head of her procession moved down the nave. Her maid, inspecting the arrangements, found we had omitted to supply the one item she would require on that important occasion - a murror. We hurriedly supplied

My ministry had been drawn into the preparation since the Minister of Works was also Master of the Oueen's Works in lineal descent from Gundulf, the weeping monk of Rochester, who had begun the Tower of London for William the Conqueror. That responsibility for the upkeep of royal palaces and the preparation for state occasions had continued down the centuries. Lintil the coronation, the chief preoccupation of the ministry had been supporting Harold Macmillan's drive for 300,000 houses and the atomic energy programme. Over-night we suddenly seemed to have been dragged back centuries. A small book was placed in my hands written by an Abbot of Westminster in about 1307. It was the Liber Regalis-the Royal Book. and the first sentences translated from Latin were: "This is the order according to which the King has to be crowned and anointed. Eccles said to me: "For every thousand who will watch events in London in June, there will be a million who will watch through the eyes of the press, the film and the TV screen. We must be sure that what they see brings credit and dignity to the Queen and our country.

One of our problems was meeting the requirements of the BBC for a live recording of the ceremony, Television in Britain was still the growing infant of the media with a mere 1.5m licences compared to the 11m radio listeners and the worldwide audience for newsreels and

Why hother, it was asked, with the BBC needing space for its cameras and high demands for special lighting. The first time we set up lights in the Abbey to BBC requirements the result was an intolerable blaze of light. "Impossible", exclaimed the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Opposition to the BBC making a live broadcast gathered force. Many were genuinely concerned that the live broadcast would impose an extra burden on the Queen during the long ceremony. There were also important participants in the ceremony who feared that their slightest slip would be instantly transmitted to the watching millions and there were some who were mainly due to our minister. able", said the Marquis of A, "that chaps in pubs should watch the Queen with their third pint of beer in their hands". The opposition found its final expression in the decision of the Coronation Joint Executive Committee when the Earl Marshal announced that "live television would be restricted to the procession west of the choir screen but that a film of the ceremony would be made available to the BBC". I told him that the decision would create an uproar in press and Partiament. Indeed it was so. An angry Winston Churchill rose in the House of Commons to state that the arrangements would be reviewed. A chastened BBC returned to the Abbey a few weeks later with more modest lighting needs and from there went on to its own crowning triumph of Coronation Day.

into London to use the elaborate facilities which had been provided to get their accounts back to their countries, including the two Camberra bombers which carried recordings of the ceremony across the Atlantic for the US and Canadian networks. David Eccles did much to promote the atmosphere of gaiety, colour and rejoicing which turned London into a carnival city which the world came to see. I shall always remember the crowds dancing in Trafalgar Square to the rhythms of Jamaican drums and the voices of thousands singing "Wonderful, Wonderful London Town" as the rain cascaded down.

Before daybreak the next day. was in my place in the Abbey. I had to deal with hitches and alarms. For example, an enclosed position had been constructed behind the tombs on the north side for film and TV cameras to record important parts of the ceremony including the crowning. During the night a thick coat of dust had filtered down onto the glass apertures, and the camera operators were in despair. I told them to save their tears and give me their handkerchiefs. Below the camera positions were scated three rows of bishops. When I explained the situation their astonishment changed to amusement. I passed along the handkerchiefs and one by one the bishops rose to clean the glass panes above their heads. Without their help the world might never have seen the colour film and TV records of the day from that position.

A white light came on at my elbow to tell me that the Queen in her coach had left the palace. A surging roar in the distance was drowned by the drums and trumpets as the first procession reached the Sanctuary. The rest of the pictures of that day are in my mind like a film to be recalled at will. For me, the most arresting incident was not the hushed solemnity of the crown upraised in the Archbishop's hands, but the moment when the voices of the choir were still and the Queen came through the choir screen to the triumph and shouts of the Westminster schoolboys. "Vivat Regina, Vivat Regina Elizabetha Vivat! Vivat! Vivat! Before us was the slender and lovely young Queen regal, in a magnificent gown covered in thousands of pearls.

The events that followed have been captured on colour film and TV - some to be shown this week. The solemnity, the colour, the dazzling spectacle of that occasion are on those records, but I feel they lack the vibrant excitement, the sense of participation and the rejoicing that filled the Abbey.

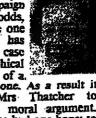

At the end of that long day I read what another civil servant, Pepys. had written in his diary of the coronation of Charles II.

"I can say that beside the sight of these glorious things. I may not for the future trouble myself to see things of state and show as being sure never to see the like again in this world".

After 30 years that is also my own

Morality, hijacked by the Tories

Labour is fighting a civilized campaign against great odds, but it has made one big mistake. It has failed to put its case in a philosophical purely material one. As a result it has enabled Mrs Thatcher to monopolize the moral argument. From the start she had one hope: to. deflect the attack on the unpopular results of her policies by transferring the guilt for her own failures on to her listeners. She does it by presenting herself as the guardian of stern "values", which alone can purify a gone-soft society. And, of course, on questions of defence she bangs the simple petriotic drum. bangs the simple patriotic drum.

It is a technique designed to leave the Labour Party arguing about details instead of principles. It should, of course, have been the other way round. For the issues in this campaign are indeed moral Mass unemployment, for instance, can never be a purely economic matter. It undermines the foundations of our society. No country can save itself from decline, cally, if it tolerates the sense of hopelessness among its people which comes from uselessness.

Yet that mood, which is growing dangerously, is grist to Mrs Thatcher's electoral mill. She was even claiming with satisfaction on TV the other day that the majority of young people in this country, including those who are out of work, are satisfied with the lot she offers them and will youe for her, if that is true, the has lowered the sinks of a whole she has lowered the sights of a whole

The accusation would not stand, of course, if she could hold out any hope that the "purifying" process was coming to an end. But that she cannot, and will not, do. What Labour should be hammering home is that unemployment is politically necessary to her type of society - one in which the workforce is cowed into submission, in keeping with the "Victorian values" she invokes.

in the same way, we are in danger of letting her ride away from the essentials of the nuclear argument. To say that the Labour Party does not wish to defend this country is, of course, a malicious fallacy. Labour's whole case is that defence loses its meaning when the use of nuclear weapons is involved. We are in a new ball game because never before in human history have we been preparing to make war with weapons which would bring global and irreversible catastrophe, to ourselves

Michael Heseltine's parrot talk about "deterrence" will no longer do, because the line between having nuclear weapons to deter and having them to attack is wearing perilously thin. If, as he declares, their possession by the West has kept the peace for 34 years, then we already have enough of them to deter. What both sides are now pursuing is nuclear superiority.

And as the consequence of the new weapons that are being developed grow more terrible, so that the arrival of even one enemy missile would wipe out half of Britain, the search for nuclear superiority is increasingly seen to lie in finding a weapon that will knock out the enemy before he can retaliate. So we are right into the heart of the moral dilemma which Mrs Thatcher refuses to recognize would we be willing to use nuclear weapons first? such a situation, the acquisition of new nuclear weapons has become the alternative, not the road, to multilateral disarmament. You cannot openly accuse another power of planning to make war on you, and then expect it to lower its guard. The need for a non-nuclear strategey has become imperative in our own defence, as independent groups of military men have urged. But who is going to start to create the non-nuclear psychology if Britain does not give the lead?

That is the essence of the case for nuclear unilateralism. A majority of people probably now agree that the installation of cruise missiles and the acquisition of Trident would put us in greater peril than we are in now. It is the pursuit of overkill that will lead to war, for two can play that game. Britain's abandonment of unnecessary nuclear weapons would be a signal that the great powers could pull themselves back from the brink, a signal for which, unless we believe in devils, the Soviet Union itself is probably waiting. In such a situation, the argument about Polaris is largely irrelevant.

Labour's contribution to multilateral disarmament is not to trade weapon for weapon, but to create a new atmosphere and to proceed from there step by step towards the creation of a non-nuclear weapons world. It is time someone tried.

Charting a path to recovery

Although the Conservative Party has much to say about inflation and Labour much to say about unem-ployment, neither is proud to emphasize the fact that Britain has been declining economically, relatively to other countries, for many years. Their reticence is hardly surprising, since both, in different ways, are partly responsible. In sharp contrast, the Alliance faces the facts of the nation's decline much more frankly, and quite explicitly claims to have policies genuinely aimed at reversing it. But its claims are frequently countered by the reply that the policies are reheated versions of old pro-growth policies which have failed in the past.

The evaluation of this controversy requires a distinction between 'macro" and "micro" economic policy. Macro policy is concerned with demand, inflation and unemployment. Micro policy with detailed policy toward industry. Far from having bland or vague policies on the latter, the SDP and the Liberals have precise prescriptions in profusion, and these are their strongest economic policies.

They emphasize the existing deficiencies in industrial and vocational training and education and propose specific reforms of the apprenticeship system. For the greater encouragement of industrial competition, they suggest further discouragement of mergers, more practical assistance to small business and the reduction of bureaucratic obstacles to those businesses. The link between economic growth and education is emphasized.

Mr Patrick Jenkin, the Industry, Secretary, recently defined the aims of his Department as "a profitable, competitive and adaptive productive sector in the United Kingdom". Worthy motives indeed, but nowhere did he mention the need for better industrial education and planning. Why was it recently necessary for the Director of the National Economic Development Office to remind the Government that this country spends only half the European average on vocational training.

Having said all this, I have to concede that my own economic research has also sustained me in serious misgivings about Alliance "macro" policy, mainly because it seemed to me to run away from the problem of the unions. The specific policies on union reform are blatantly schizophrenic. On the one hand they pronounce the fundamental role of unions in harmonious industrial relations; on the other they make detailed proposals which, if put into law, would make Mr Tebbit look like a workers' hero (for example the closed shop, accepted in principle, would in practice be effectively banned by a scheme requiring validation by regular secret ballots of workers involved, requiring two third majorities from all those entitled to vote).

On wage inflation they have a battery of proposals which are quite unworkable without union cooperation, which they blithely believe could be obtained effectively in exchange for a promise to reilate. The truth is that the SDP in particular contains many activists who are deeply anti-union, but that it is also strongly influenced by "wets" who think quite otherwise.

I believe that so long as they fail to tackle this, any alternative government that tries another way of recovery will fail for the same reasons that all the others failed. "Free" collective bargaining and Keynesian economics are simply unreconcilable, and no amount of tinkering can make them otherwise.

But I do believe that if Britain had been governed continuously for the past half century by the kinds of people and policies now represented in the Alliance, we should now be not only a much richer nation but a much happier one. I also believe that brisk economic growth possible for us in the future; and that major precondition is that the Alliance does quickly succeed in becoming the strong alternative government

The reasons for such unfashionable optimism lie in the very historical circumstances of our decline. From the Second World War till the early 1970s the western capitalist mixed economies (meaning all countries from. say. Italy upwards in per capita income) experienced spectacular economic growth at about 4 per cent per annum per head of population. Inside the average the countries which started from the bottom end of the league table, tended to grow faster than the others. There was a general impression that the whole system was catching up the United

Britain was not originally at the bottom of the league table; in 1955 we were second in Europe and fifth in the world. But we were a long way behind the United States. What should have happened is that as other countries caught up with us. we should have caught up with the US. As everyone knows, almost the opposite occurred; the other countries not only caught us up but overtook us. A quarter of a century on, we are now bottom but one in Western Europe, and also bottom but one out of the top 20 countries in the world.

The causes of Britain's decline are hotly debated, go a long way back, and are not exclusively economic. It is generally agreed that it is a joint product of many ingredients involving class, education, management and labour. But be that as it may, it remains a fact that if we could fall behind, we have potential for catching up.

HOUSE PROUD POLITICS

in housing. When the state first intervened to build homes for heroes, Lloyd-George's Unionist coalition partners supported public provision on the ground that it would settle social discontents. A generation later, Lord Swinton minuted Churchill's Cabinet about the practical consequences of the policy. He warned of hives of socialist voters bunched together on council estates. Four years ago Mrs Thatcher acted on the warning, sensing political opportunity in the break-up of the estates and the transmutation of council tenants into owners.

Threading through Labour areas there was to be a new seam of owner occupier, people with a territorial stake, social stability. a respect for inheritance rights (and as a bonus, a disposition to vote Conservative). Has she not been proved right? Her government had banged mercilessly on the drum of "right to buy" and gloried in those mock-Georgian doors replacing municipal drab. The latest arithmetic of discounts for tenant purchasers may make questionable financial sense for the taxpayer, but the right to buy theme makes undoubted political sense for the Conservatives. Unfortunately owner occupation does not make a housing policy, nor do bargain basement prices for public assets suggests a willingness to begin the much needed overhaul of housing finance. Victorian values are one thing: the growing dilapidation of the country's extensive tracts of Victorian housing is another.

We are, by any international test, a nation of convinced house accountability and concealed purchasers, fixed on that distant goal of ownership in fee simple, often showing a yeoman distaste for landlordism public or private, and prudently aware of the fiscal favouritism shown to that form of tenure. Yet this fact reflected even in Labour's manifesto promise to extend home their own repairs at the council's ownership - makes pressing expense; and all - especially the some considered statement on the future shape of the rented sector, where 45 per cent of householders are still accommodated. All the manifestos fail to provide one. Renters are the security. poor, dependent on state support

Conservative politicians have motivation to buy, the elderly One is the numbers game which often had a clear eye for politics (who may have been owners but all governments are tempted to need the specialist housing and support which councils can provide), the infirm; they are

> No party appears to have linked housing policy and the conditions for renewed economic growth. Yet these must include housing for migratory workers as well as mobilization of some part of that great portfolio of assets now locked up in the building societies, for example by the provision of upmarket rented accommodation. Everywhere - most worryingly in the Conservative manifesto there is damp pessimism about the future of private renting this reflects a refusal to face the inequalities of housing finance.

> For years now a housing white paper has been needed to address the rented sector as a whole. It would redefine the role of housing, yes, as a "residual" however much the town hall managers and Labour councillors might dislike that word. But it would also give councils a renewed role in clearing the unhappy end of the urban private rented market with its poor tenants and unmotivated landlords in order to re-launch the private rental market free of its Lloyd-George restrictions on rents and tenure. There is a role, too, for the publicly-financed but semiautonomous housing associations and their often imaginative schemes for renting; the vitality of the associations is bought at the risk of lack of bureaucracy. The writers of such a white paper would take little from the housing paragraphs of the manifestos currently on display. All parties now appear modishly to subscribe to the idea of "rights" for tenants, for example to do Alliance - are starry-eyed about the management problems arising from a stock of council dwellings more than half of whose tenants now rely on social

house-building aggregates, as if foundations laid, preferably at public expense, were the test of virtue they once were. The party's plans rely on a concept of housing need as an absolute when instead it is an unreliable and shifting agglomeration of preferences within a crude surplus of physical buildings over households. That said, Mrs Thatcher's government has seemed complacent. Unless the boom in private sector building recently described by some does indeed happen, by the middle of the decade there will again be a marked discrepancy, between households and houses, with keen consequences for prices and social comfort. The government's refusal to give any estimates of the future course of housing demand has sadly been typical of an approach that has failed to locate housing investment within the national economy or acknow ledge the artificial buoying up of demand for housing funds through fiscal distortion and housing market imperfections (stamp duty, estate agency) protected by governments.

Because manifestos are about promises to give things to people, the Conservatives do not claim credit as they should for pushing council rents up to a more realistic level (though the recent spectacle of some councils subsidizing their rates through council rents suggests the process may be going too far). Sensible housing policy for the 1980s requires taking things from people - like the benefits of mortgage tax relief, some security of tenure, green fields needed for building. The Conservatives with their acute sense of housing's politics are making no such threats, and the other parties promise all things to all men; housing policy suffers as a result.

Electoral choice placed in historical perspective.

From Professor Royden Harrison Sir, The Prime Minister rightly contends that this elction offers us the most dramatic and the most important choice since 1945. But neither Mrs Thatcher herself, nor the other protagonists, can claim to have explained the nature of that choice in its philosophic terms nor to have placed it in its historical perspective.

Alas! One looks in vain to Mr Roy lenkins to improve the debate. Having announced that he come to break the "mould" of British politics. he has put himself in a thoroughly he has put himsen in a manager, false position. Instead of proudly taking up the mantle of the Conservative leader which is truly his, he cannot break himself of the habit of affecting originality.

The Opposition is in transition from Labourism to Socialism. Mrs Thatcher exagerates when she suggests that this transition is complete. The mudgers and the fudgers are still on stage. However, she is correct in discerning a widening gap between the Labour-ists concerned with defending the existing interests of dependent employees and the Socialists who are bent on enlarging the definition of those interests so as to challenge the existing distribution of wealth and the structure of power.

At the same time the Tories themselves are experiencing divisions which are hardly less profound. The Conservative tradition indentified with the "wets" is going down before the radical reaction of the "arids". The process was inaugurated by Mr Heath, not by Mrs Thatcher. After all it was Mr Heath who diminished the British Commonwealth of Nations in favour of belonging to a European market. It was Mr Heath who wanted to sweep away, at a stroke, the whole existing structure of industrial relations in favour of some untried, radical, systematic, legal jobbery.

But it was indeed not until the advent of Mrs Thatcher that Conservatives so far forgot themselves that they mounted a frontal attack upon the whole post-war social settlement. The mixed economy should be dismantled in favour of "small business". Comprehensive social services should be replaced by a two-tier system favourable to the thrifty and to the deserving poor. Keynes was wrong and Beve was mad when they suggested that. Government could and should accept a responsibility for full employment. Then in an inspired. after-thought Mrs Thatcher per-formed the indian rope trick. She made a glorious defence of the outposts of Empire after the Empire

So let Mr Jenkius put his pade in his pocket and imporve his oppor-tunity. He is the last and the best friend of British Conservatism. From Dr Sebastian Kraemer Sir. "Our competitors..." Mrs. Thatcher's and Mr Tebbit's words for other countries. Is it the idea that Britain is a floating shop with guns on it that has apparently won the hearts of the people? Judging by the polls the new business Tories seem to have got the mixture just right, sacrificing the old patrician value of "service", the liberal "citizenship" or the socialist "comradeship" in favour of just winning. And so they will, and lead us into the selfish society, unless the electorate wakes, up in time to realize that nations run on cooperation and not on victories.

Hooked on the fly

from Mr A. L. Maycock

Sir, Before a new myth is created by John Hewish (May 21), may I say that fly fishing on beautiful Lady bower Reservoir and secluded small lakes here in the North-West for tasty, hard-fighting rainbow and brown trout stocked especially for our enjoyment is indeed the sport for the many. Hurray! Yours, etc.,

Theatres to get sponsor for awards

The annual awards of the Society of West End Theatre, in seven years have established themselves as probably the most important theatre awards in Britain, are to be sponsored by the English Tourist Board for the next three

Mr Michael Montague, chairman of the board, said the decision is in recognition of the London theatre's key role in attracting annually 30 million domestic and 7.5 million overseas visitors to the capital. It is estimated that more than three million overseas tourists go to the theatre, representing half of the total attendance at London theatres.

Mr Montague added that the constant forecast that the lights would go out in the London theatre was "rubbish". He said: The future for the London theatre is as strong as the talents of the artists, playwrights, composers, designers and dir-

Glover had started his ournalistic career in Yorkshire, but in 1927 he left Britain to join the Penang Gazette as a sub-editor. From there he moved in 1930 to the Straits Times in Singapore and three years later was offered the general managership of the evening paper, the Malaya

Tribune Seeing an opportunity to create a Malayan national newspaper Glover oversaw a expansion which by 1938 became the Malaya Tribune Press Ltd controlling the largest group of newspapers in British Malaya with printing plants in Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, Ipoh and Penang.

When the Japanese invaded Clover left Singapore with his wife and settled in India where he wrote In 70 Days which was published in 1947. This was an unsensationally critical account of the British response to the Japanese menace in which he blamed the authorities for failing to mobilise the local knowledge capacities and enthusiasms of the civilian population in the face of the threat.

In 1945 he returned to Singapore to restart the papers which had been closed down by the Japanese and in 1948 he returned to London where he ubsequently served in Foreign Office.

She was closely associated with the dance world for many years and she designed for the London ballet schools and dance groups in this country and abroad. She was also the author of the costume construction book, How to Dress Dancers.

From the 1960s onwards she lived and painted in the Pendle area of the Lancashire Pennines, interspersed with regular visits to a second home in northern Spain. Over the years she came to identify with the Lancashire countryside and its people. This was reflected in her work: especially, perhaps, with the wild flowers she adored. Her work in still life and the landscapes drawn from the Pennine hills were widely exhibited throughout the North. Her work was acquired by galleries overseas, as well as by the Ministry of Works, Lancaster University, county councits and many private collectors at home and abroad; and it was used to illustrate The English People - a study of Britain in pictures.

She was a regular exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and also exhibited frequently at the Royal Scottish Academy and the Royal West of England

CRICKET: SUSSEX TAKE ADVANTAGE OF BAD LIGHT AND REGULATIONS

The thrash of a farce's final act

LORD'S: Sussex (4pts) heat Middleyear on a faster scoring rate. The farce of the John Player League regulations invoked when bad weather intervenes was revived at Lord's yesterday. Sussex were required to score only 98 in 18 overs beat Middlesex, bad light having delayed the start of their innings until 5.45, and they were able to thrash with abandon. Le Roux looked a gentle giant, beginning as if he has still not readjusted after the winter to his restricted John Player run-up, and only Barclay and Jones, who beat Barlow four times in one over, put any sort of brake on the scoring.

The 50 came in the tenth over, the 100 in the 21st, and there was little sign of a breakthrough until Parker's sharp throw from deep extra cover run out Slack at the bowler's end as he came for a second. It was an ironic end to a

Lamb leads Leicester

NORTHAMPTON: Northamptonshire beat Leicestershire by four WICKETS.

Leicestershire, who have twice won the John Player League and who tend rather to get the better of these neighbourly encounters, were properly righted at Northampton yesterday. Largely owing to the medium-pace bowling of Tim Lamb, who came off with figures of 8-2-9-4. Leicestershire struggled to reach 103 for nine, none of their batsmen ever settling.

Northamptonshire, batting in atrocious light, lost two quick wickets to Taylor, but Kapil Dev and Allan Lamb added 54 in 10 overs, treating Robert and Taylor in pretty disparaging fashion. Steele took two wickets in one over, but Williams put an end to any fancy ideas. Northamptonshire ended with four wickets and 14 overs in hand. Tim Lamb, on a damp and cloudy afternoon, had the Leicestershire batsmen in all sorts of trouble. Butcher was bowled at 10. Gower was leg before at 16, and then in the was 18 before at 16, and then in the same over Davison was beaten by the swing and lost his off stump. Miss Mandlikova, whose last win

For the first time since 1970 there over Mrs Lloyd occurred in this

Susan Barker won the title from a weaker held in 1976, a British player Joanna Durie, is among the last eight women. For the first time since 1950, the women's quarter-finals include five players born in the United States. One of the last group is Kathleen Horvath, aged 17, who has a Hungarian father, a German mother but was born in Chicago.

On Saturday she became the first player to beat Martina Navratilova (last year's winner here) since Chris Lloyd did so in the final of the Australian championships on Dec-ember 5. "Everybody thought Martina was invincible," Mrs Lloyd said yesterday. "But she's human — which means that sooner or later she had to lose a match." Miss Navratilova did not fall part emotionally, as she sometimes used to do. She was beaten on merit by a smarter, tidier player who had nothing to lose except a tennis match. An interesting feature was the bold way Miss Horvath attacked Miss Navratilova's backhand and went to the net to put away what were often careworn returns.

The status of favourite thus reverts to Mrs Lloyd, four times champion. This raises two ques-tions. At the age of 28 could she win at least one Grand Slam singles title or the tenth consecutive year? Her record in this respect is already unique. And as United States and Australian champion could she, in the twilight of her career as a contender for big titles, achieve a Grand Stam of the four major singles championships by winning here and at Wimbledon? The last eight line up as follows: Miss Horvath v Mima Jausovec.

Severiano Ballesteros, the Onited States Master golfer, stands on the States Master golfer, stands on the iron at the sixth (156 yards) dropped threshold of his first victory in five feet from the hole and, at the next (529 yards), a stunning three George's. He leads the PGA championship, sponsored by Sun only three feet away. Championship, sponsored by Sun Alliance by only one stroke, but the glow of victory seems to be upon him and Nick Faldo, the outstanding player of the year after three successive victories, has removed himself from the reckoning.

With a third round of 67, three under a formidable par, and a total 207, Ballesteros leads Brian Waites (who scored a 66 yesterday) Waites (who scored a bb yesterday) by one stroke and Sandy Lyle (67). Ian Woosnam (68) and Bill Longmuir (68) by two. Faldo, one stroke behind overnight, 100k 74 and languishes eight strokes behind course, but he is playing with such authority, and with such audacity when danger threatens, that he seems to have the measure of both the course and his challengers. With due respect to Waites, a canny golfer of now advancing years. Lyle scems to be the only man with sufficient weight of shot to trouble the Spaniard.

The heart of Ballesteros's round was the passage of three holes from the lifth, where he recled off birdic, birdie, eagle. At the fifth (422 yards), his four iron evoked a 20ft purt

France keep hold of the reins

By Jenny MacArthur

France, the reigning world champions, won the Prince of Wales Cup in the Nations' Cup event, sponsored by Everest Double Glazing, at Hickstead yesterday, it was the second time in two years the Cup had gone to France and their victory puts them at the top of the League for the President's Cup, which is judged on each country's six best Nations' Cup results.

Britain finished equal third with Germany and Australia, behind the Netherlands. It was a disappointing day for the British. Liz Edgar had 20 faults on Everest Forever in the first round and then had to retire him when he was found to have a swollen hock. David Broome had two good rounds on his new horse Last Resort and finished on four faults as did Nick Skelton on St rands Angiezarke, who went last and reigning French champion. In the Capt 1, France, 22 pts; 2, Great Brian, 16 pts; were considered the mainstay of the fourth round, Jappeloup had a 3, Switzerland, 13 pts; 4, Germany, 12 pts.

Afterwards, Willie John McBride, his face stiff and grey, claimed that two of his forwards. Claran Fitzgerald and lain Paxton, received head wounds after being scraped by Manawatu sprigs sprigs, and that Gaham Price, the prop, had been marked about the body.

McBride commented that this was nothing new in his experience of rugby in New Zealand and his lieutenant. Jim Telfer, said that from his experience with Scotland in New Zealand two years ago, anyone on the ground ran the danger of being kicked. McBride suggested that what appeared to be common practice in New Zealand -Wellington match - would result in

Finally, Shady Deal and Mid Day moderate each-way chance. Patrick-Louis Biancone will not run Water Girl in the Oaks as she did not stay the 10 furlongs of yesterday's Prix de Saint-James, but the Frenchman will be in action in the Prix La will saddle All Along for the Coronation Cup..

The Prix Dollar at Longchamp yesterday went by a short neck to the favourite. Weish Term from the German champion Orofino, who was receiving 2lb. A length and a half away third came Darly. Weish Term now goes for the Eclipse Stabes prior to the Budgerier. Stakes prior to the Budwe Million at Chicago.

Lehmi Gold disappointed in his first run in Europe, finishing only eighth of the nine runners. He raced just behind the leaders until the straight but was then a spent force. Freddie Head said afterwards: "It's all new to him. He came down the hill badly, but I'll tell you Lembi Gold will improve many kilos on this." The colt will next run in the 12-furlong Prix du Chateau on June

Pat Eddery had no sort of run on Silver Dip in the Prix du Palais Royal, so the filly stays in France to contest Wednesday's Prix du

 Stephen MacDonald has cleverly missed the trap that could easily have turned his play, NOT ABOUT HEROES (Radio 47,45pm), into a documentary. It is the true story of the short-lived friendship between Slegfried Sassoon and Wifred Owen with MacDonald himself in the part of Sassoon and James Telfer as Owen. The two meet in August 1917 when both are patients at the Craiglockhart War Hospital for Hervous Disorders, receiving treatment for shall-shock. Both are under a cloud. Owen has been branded as a coverd by his colonel while Sassoon, eithough decorated for bravery at the Somme, has recently made a public statement. recently made a public statement accusing the government of waging a 'war of aggression and conquest' — a controversial anough spisods that MacDonald falls to oursue. Alliance to capitalize on Steel's popularity between success and failure for the Alliance, Mr Jenkins said: Yes, I have always said I never liked it. I would be prepared to do anything to advance the cause of the Alliance, but there is no point in doing that. We are not changing rules; we are not changing titles."

Mr Steel said the Alliance accepted that they had not been as successful as they should have been in getting their policies across, and they would concentrate on that in the second half of the campaign. They did not believe, Mr Jenkins said, in "routine political invective

Asked if they regarded the role of the Alliance to be a party of opposition moderating Mrs Thatcher's policies, Mr Steel: "Not at all. We believe that, at the moment, the Tories are winning - at the moment - but it is our task not to just overhaul the Labour Party, but to see if we can catch Mrs Thatcher in time." Asked if that was realistic, he said: "We think it is attainable. I would not put money on it, but we think it can

The Alliance was making substantial headway in areas where Labour was holding seats. The strategy meeting had come to the conclusion that at the halfway point of the campaign, the Labour Party had been defeated. The Alliance was therefore gearing itself to, first of all, a switch of voters from the Labour Party as people realized it could not win, but also for a switch of Conservatives who usually voted frem fear of socialism Mr Steel said the Alliance rejected the claim that there was no alternative to unemployment. "We say there simply has got to be. That is what the public believes, and we are going to provide it."

The Liberals attending were Lord Tordoff, joint chairman of the Liberal Election Committee. Mr Alan Beith, the party's Chief Whip and Mr John Pardoe and Mr Paul Tyler, both former members of Parliament and senior campaign organizers. From the SDP there were Dr David Owen, Mr William Rodgers and Mrs Shirley Williams, Lord Diamond and Lord Harris of Grenwich, and Mrs Anne Sofer, a member of The Greatr London Council. Most of the politicians were casually dressed and most of the advisers in suits and ties. Mr Steel was wearing a white Arran sweater with faded blue jeans and white plimsolls.

Unity at Williamsburg

The subject of huge US budget deficits and high interest rates came up at all the private bilateral meetings but was not expected to dominate the formal economic meetings at which unemployment and currency fluctuations will be highlighted. In the interests of harmony the leaders appeared to accept the new Reagan Administration line that high budget deficits are neither the cause of high interest rates nor a threat to the promising recovconcern about the possible impact on British airlines of an anti-trust suit in the United States, arising from the collapse of Laker Airways.

A British spokesman said Sir Geofficey had "registered our point of view" during a private discusseion with Mr Donald Regan the US Treasury Secretary, during a private meeting at Williasburg.

His intervention follows talks between American and Bristish officials in London last week, at which it was agreed to extend the deadline for US Justice Department information-gathering subpoenes against British Airways and British Caledo-

At Versailles last year there was free champagne, pate and a huge variety of French cheeses for the accompanying borde of journalists. This year the fare at the Williamsburg summit is more modest - beer, hamburgers, "tastee" chips and almost every kind of fast-food im-

One of the main problems for any government organiz-ing a summit meeting of this nature (and it will be Britain's problem next year) is what to do with the press.

All the conference sessions are taking place behind tig-htly-closed doors in a specially secured part of this picturesque eighteenth-century town. Even when the talking has stopped, access to the main participants is virtually impossible except at brief press conferences.

Catfish with hush puppies

So it has been decided that the best way of keeping the press happy is to lay on a constant supply of food and beverages. The summit organizers have consequently nizers have consequently erected a huge blue and white striped tent covering more than an acre, where from dawn until midnight journal-ists can fill themselves with frozen yogurt, jelly-bean flavoured ice cream and Kentucky fried chicken.

The eight summit leaders are eating in much grander style. Craig Clairborne, the food writer of the New York Times, has devised a series of menus for them "made from American ingredients and American inspiration" that are intended to show American cuisine at its best

Their fare ranges from pork barbecue to Maine lobster, from Tex-Mex fish tamales to a Louisiana crayfish speciality known as Cajun popcorn, from California goat cheese to gingersnaps. Craig Clairborne believes that American cooking has been maligned for far too long and views the summit as 2 chance to set the record

However, one wonders whether President Mitterrand will really take to "deep fried catfish with bush puppies". When it comes to pagean try, the Americans can match the British any day. Whatever their ceremonial guards may lack in tradition they more than compensate for with the precision of their drilling and the verve of their music.

An honour guard made up of all four services greeted all of the summit leaders as they arrived by horse-drawn carriages outside the former governor's mansion in colonial Williamsburg

But the main attraction was provided by a Redcoat drum and fife band which paraded in front of the welcoming dais playing a medley of old-American tunes.

Tactfully, the band dropped Yankee Doodle when Mrs Thatcher arrived in case the song's revolutionary conno-tations might offend her, and played The British Grenadier

Sadly, a similar attempt to be tactful backfired with two of the other leaders. Mr Pierre Trudeau, the Canadian Prime Minister, was greeted with a rendering of The Maple Leaf Forever, which stirs unhappy memories of defeat among French Canadians, while Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, the Japanese Prime Minister, was serenaded with a song that was used to raise the morale of Japanese Navy crews before going in to battle during the Second World War and symbolized the rise of Japa-

Hats off for dashing Trudeau

Mrs Thatcher appeared to be far and away the most popular of the six visiting leaders with the natives of Williamsburg if applause is anything to go by. She received rousing cheers when she arrived, whereas the other leaders were offered only polite applause.

Perhaps if the Americans had not revolted two centuries ago, the citizens of Williamsburg would be Tory voters

But if Mrs Thatcher drew most applause, Mr Trudeau caused the biggest stir when he arrived, looking like Maurice Chevalier in a dashing white hat and a red rose in his button hole.

To the dismay of the photographers, he took his hat off almost immediately and kept it off throughout the arrival ceremony.

Eventually one frustrated photographer yelled at him put your hat back on" and Mr Trudeau - an experienced self-publicist - kindly obliged.

The papers

The question now facing the SDP-Liberal Alliance was one of survival, according to The Observer, yesterday, which praised the Alliance's policies but accused it of a lack of passion and "cutting edge"

But the country was more divided, the Conservatives continued to preach "salvation through masochism" and a Tory landslide could well bring an "alarming" shift to the right, particularly in areas like

Dealing with the Alliance's dual leadership. The Mail on Sanday said Mr Jenkins had proved as much of a disaster for the SDP as Mr Foot had for Labour. Without the trappings of office "his plummy style echoes emptily.
